Focused on housing and housing-enabling infrastructure

Urban, Rural and Northern Indigenous Housing Strategy

2023-24 to 2030-31

Focused on reducing core housing need for the most vulnerable

Discussion

- Are CIRNAC programs adequately flexible?
- Do they work well with other federal government programs under the National Housing Strategy, 2019?
- How do these programs work in the northern context?
- Are there implementation challenges?
- Other questions, observations, concerns?

Measuring Results

Core Housing Need

- Key federal indicator used to measure the effectiveness of housing programs under the National Housing Strategy, 2019
- Measured every 5 years through Canadian Census with data calculated and published by Statistics Canada
- Funding recipient data collection and reporting tends to focus on:
 - number of new builds
 - number of households provided with affordability supports
 - number of major repair projects undertaken

Affordability

Defined as accommodations costing 30 per cent or less of before-tax household income

Adequacy

Defined as accommodations that are not in need of major repair

Suitability

Defined as accommodations with sufficient space for the size and make-up of the household

Discussion – Gauging Progress and Success

- Does Core Housing Need adequately measure progress in the NWT?
- Is collection data focused on core housing need helpful at the community-level?
- What other indicators are key to gauging progress, and assessing needs?
- What does success mean for you?
