Public Housing

Public Housing refers to a rental program that provides income-based subsidies for the rental of housing for residents in need.

Housing NWT provides financial, administrative, maintenance, construction and repair support to community service agents so they can deliver Public Housing on behalf of Housing NWT.

Currently Housing NWT operates more than 2,400 Public Housing units which are managed by Local Housing Organizations located in 31 communities throughout the NWT.

How Does Rent Work?

The Housing NWT rent scale is based on making rents simpler, more predictable, increased fairness, and supporting self-reliance.

The rent scale is designed to help improve the cost of living in NWT communities, lessen dependency on government programs while encouraging self-reliance and personal responsibility, and addressing the disincentive to work.

The rent scale increases consistency between communities as rent is the same at various income levels in communities with similar cost of living.

Key Points

- Rent is based on the household's gross income for your community.
- Seniors receive up to a $1,000 per month deduction from their income.
- No household pays less than $70 per month or more than $1,625 in rent.
- For people at the minimum rent, rent is about 4% of their income which is much lower than the 30% affordability standard. The maximum rent is about 19.5% of income.
- The rent scale reduces variability in rent as small changes in income due to short-term employment, per diems, or other short-term payments may not result in a change in rent.

The information provided in this fact sheet only provides a general description of the program. Not all information relating to the policies and procedures have been included.
